CONFERENCE HIGHLIGHTS REFLECTION AND ACTION IN RESEARCH

At an conference RCLA sponsored with the Centre for Action Research in Professional Practice, scholars from around the world challenged the traditional notion of researchers as detached observers and explored new research methods that bring together reflection and action. Attendees discussed experiences with action research, how narratives can catalyze change, and action research's contribution to leadership development. » Learn More

GLOBAL LEADERS DISCUSS THE POWER & PRACTICE OF COMPASSIONATE LEADERSHIP

The escalating crises in the world today offer two choices: continuing violence and conflict, or finding a way to move forward toward peace and greater understanding. In a groundbreaking dialogue, Her Majesty Queen Noor of Jordan, Rabbi Irwin Kula, and the Sakyong, Jamgon Mipham Rinpoche, a prominent Tibetan lama, discussed the power and practice of compassionate leadership. Based on their own traditions and experiences, they examined how their different paths can contribute to a shared vision of interdependence and global connection.

PRACTICE NOTE: USING WORLD CAFFÉ TO FACILITATE COMPLEX CONVERSATIONS

What originated as a largely improvised process among a group of innovators has become a method facilitators can use to spur the breakthrough thinking usually associated with intimate group settings, while also tapping the knowledge of a large group. This Practice Note draws on RCLA's experience using World Café in a Race and Leadership symposium to examine the central roles social identity, particularly race and ethnicity, can play in the work of social change organizations. Facilitators can use this method to enable a variety of rich, in-depth discussions, letting coherent themes emerge without imposing their own interpretations.
