INTRODUCTION

WHAT IS A RESUME?

A resume is a summary of your education, professional experience, and technical skills that are directly related or relevant to a specific position for which you are applying.

WHAT A RESUME IS NOT

A resume is not meant to be an accounting of your entire professional and academic history. Written with a specific employer in mind, it should only include the education, professional experience, and technical skills that relate directly to an employer's hiring needs.

THE POWER OF A RESUME

In combination with strategic networking and a well-crafted cover letter, a resume is a marketing tool designed to persuade an employer that you possess the skills and qualifications to warrant further consideration—via an interview—for a given position. While a strong resume will help you to leave a positive, lasting impression on an employer, a poorly constructed resume will undoubtedly be used to screen you out of the selection process. This guide will walk you through the best practices to ensure you have an impeccable resume for your next application.

DIFFERENT RESUME FORMATS

The format and content discussed in this guide are applicable to most positions; however, it is important to note two major exceptions: non-US based employers and the Federal Government.

- For non-US based employers, you should consult with the Office of Career Services for additional resources on how to craft your resume.
- For Federal Government jobs, in addition to OCS staff, you can consult USA Jobs's resume builder and its helpful online webinars on federal resumes. Additional guidance can be received from other resources like TopResume, CareerProPlus, and ZipJob.

IDENTIFYING THE EMPLOYER'S HIRING NEEDS

Every employer has a unique set of hiring needs that determines what they are looking for in an employee and by extension in a resume. Because most employers will only give each resume a 10 to 15 second scan, your resume must immediately highlight the aspects of your education, experience, skills, and qualifications that are most relevant to each employer's hiring needs.

Create a customized and targeted version of your resume in response to every position. In each resume, highlight only the information that is most relevant to each employer's hiring needs. Identify the employer's hiring needs by researching these elements:

1. THE EMPLOYER'S FIELD OF PRACTICE—the issue areas, target populations, and/or sectors in which the organization operates (e.g. healthcare, people experiencing homelessness, local government, or economic development).

Information about the employer's field of practice can be found on the organization's website and in published research, media coverage, and marketing materials. Demonstrate to the employer that you have relevant experience by highlighting:

- Jobs, internships, and volunteer experiences that occurred in organizations within the same or similar fields of practice;
- Academic degrees, coursework, Capstone, and specializations that focus on the same or similar fields of practice;
- Related industry experience, including volunteer work, student groups involvement, professional associations, publications, or clients you've worked with;
- Significant research and publications in the field of practice;
- Membership in relevant professional associations and groups.

2. THE EMPLOYER'S POSITION REQUIREMENTS—the responsibilities, tasks, key words, and core competencies associated with the position to which you are applying (e.g. Program Manager, Policy Analyst, Hospital Administrator, Planner, or Consultant).

Information about the employer's position requirements can be found in the job description and in job descriptions for similar positions in peer organizations. Demonstrate to the employer that you have relevant experience by highlighting:

- Relevant jobs and internships with similar position requirements;
- Coursework/Capstone in which you performed relevant duties;
- Previous job titles that are associated with similar position requirements;
- Relevant computer skills, language skills, and technical training.

RESUME COMPOSITION

Once you have identified an employer's hiring needs, begin crafting a version of your resume that draws direct parallels between these needs and your education, experience, and qualifications.

CONTENT

You will know that your resume content is relevant if it addresses the three criteria that all employers use to make hiring decisions:

1. CAN YOU DO THE JOB?—Employers want to know if you possess the requisite experience, education, and skills to successfully perform the functions of the job.

A resume that successfully answers this question demonstrates the knowledge and skills that you've gained through relevant work experience (including jobs, internships, Capstone, and volunteer work), education, and research. It also highlights the ways in which these elements are related to the employer's position requirements.

2. WILL YOU DO THE JOB?—Employers want to know if you are committed to the issues and populations that drive the organization's work.

A resume that successfully answers this question emphasizes the degree to which your relevant work experience (including jobs, internships, Capstone, and volunteer work), education, and research are related to the employer's mission and field of practice.

3. IS THERE ORGANIZATIONAL FIT?—Employers want to know if your personal and professional values complement the company you want to work for, and vice versa.

A resume that successfully answers this question incorporates language from the job description and other industry specific jargon, which demonstrates your understanding of the issues, policies, stakeholders, and mission that impact the organization's work. This helps to convey shared values, which you can further emphasize in the cover letter and interview.

EXCLUDING INFORMATION THAT IS NOT RELEVANT (CREATING TIME GAPS)

It is okay to de-emphasize or even omit experiences that are not relevant to an employer's hiring needs.

If you are wondering whether or not an experience is relevant, consider how it relates to the position for which you are applying. If you worked with similar issues and populations but used different skills, emphasize the context of your work and de-emphasize the skills that were involved. Conversely, if you worked on completely different issues, policies, and populations, emphasize the transferable skills that you used and gained.

If your past experience is not at all related to the position for which you are applying, it may be beneficial to eliminate it altogether. Keep in mind that employers will typically disregard small "time gaps" on your resume if the other entries demonstrate that you have a substantial amount of relevant experience.

On the other hand, longer time gaps in experience are best explained in a cover letter. As time gaps are unique to each person, you may want to consult the Office of Career Services for additional insight.

DEMONSTRATING YOUR ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Employers want to know that you have the ability to make an impact on their organization. This is best demonstrated through past accomplishments that satisfy one or more of the following criteria:

- You created or helped create new programs;
- You achieved equal results with fewer resources;
- You improved the efficiency of operations;
- You achieved something positive for the first time.

QUANTIFYING YOUR WORK

Employers like results that can be demonstrated in numerical terms, including dollar amounts, percentages, and figures that show the scope of your work and accomplishments. See the following examples of quantified accomplishments:

- Launched a program for 4,000 Latinx patients to facilitate access to medical treatment and reduce cultural barriers to service delivery;
- Initiated a fee for service training program that increased revenue by 38% and helped address organizational cash flow deficiencies;
- Increased revenue by 15% by reviewing third party payments for irregularities.

CONTENT

Your resume should read like a fact sheet, with all of the information that employers want to see strategically listed in the categories outlined below.

NAME & CONTACT INFORMATION

At the top of your resume, list your name, city/location, phone number, and email address. To reflect relocation, you could also list multiple city locations or omit location. Include any letters that should come after your name to designate relevant degrees or licensure. Avoid the use of email addresses that could be construed as too personal or unprofessional (e.g., no1yankeesfan@gmail.com) and do not use the email account for your current job. When in doubt, use your NYU email address or a professional email address (e.g., Jane.Doe@gmail.com). Also, be sure that the outgoing recording on your voice messaging system is professional. See the examples below for how to include your contact info:

IMA GO-GETTER
295 Lafayette Street
New York, NY 10012
212-998-1212
address@nyu.edu

IMA GO-GETTER
New York, NY ~ 212-998-1212 ~ address@nyu.edu

EDUCATION

After your contact information, list your education if education is more relevant to the position for which you are applying than your professional experience. Include the full names of the graduate and undergraduate institutions that you have attended in reverse chronological order (i.e., NYU Wagner listed first). Under each school, list any relevant degree programs, specializations, coursework (3-5 courses), research, and academic projects, as well as your graduation date. See the example below:

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY | Robert F. Wagner Graduate School of Public Service, New York, NY
Master of Public Administration, Expected May 2024
Specialization: Management

- Relevant Coursework: Strategic Management, Managing Human Resources, Marketing for Nonprofit Organizations, Fundraising, Nonprofit Law
- Member, Wagner Management and Leadership Organization

RELEVANT EXPERIENCE

List your experience immediately after your contact information if it is a greater asset than your education, or if you have three or more years of recent professional experience that directly relate to the position for which you are applying. Otherwise, list your experience after your education or relevant research. In this section, list relevant jobs, internships, volunteer positions, and Capstone. For each entry, include the name of the organization, the location (city and state postal abbreviation), your title and department, and your dates of employment. Consider the following example:

PRESBYTERIAN MEDICAL CENTER , New York, NY Director of Billing, Department of Surgery	July 2021 - Present
<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Manage department's billing system and specialty billing office through which revenues in excess of $30 million flowed annually;• Provide operational assistance to 35 faculty practices in revenue enhancement and cost reduction opportunities;• Train and develop front-line and senior staff on compliance policies and procedures; related to Medicare/Medicaid enrollment, managed care plans, and GAAP standards• Convert department from multiple billing systems to standardized/centralized system.

Arrange your experience entries in reverse chronological order. The experiences that are most relevant to the position to which you are applying should have the most bullets (no more than 5 to 7). This way, the most relevant experiences will appear larger on the page and attract the employer's attention. Arrange the bullets describing each experience in order of importance, with the most relevant and substantial information listed first.

HOW TO INCLUDE YOUR CAPSTONE

Document this experience as part of an NYU Wagner team-based project. For most Capstones, your title will be "Project Associate," or "Project Consultant," and your first bullet should follow the format listed in the example below:

CITIZENS HOUSING AND PLANNING COUNCIL , New York, NY Project Associate, NYU Advanced Project in Urban Planning	September 2022 - Present
<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Serve on 4-person team consisting of NYU Wagner graduate candidates to identify recommendations for commercial development of Woodside, Queens in response to citywide and regional needs;• Analyze current urban design elements, land use, and housing conditions;• Conduct demographic analysis, including review of population and employment trends in order to determine present and future needs of the area and forecast economic growth.

TECHNICAL SKILLS & LANGUAGES

Pay close attention to the required skills listed in the job description. List your technical skills in order of their complexity and relevance to the position for which you are applying. For example, if you are applying for a research assistant position, it is best to list your data skills before Microsoft Office Suite. When relevant to the job, you can also include your language skills. Do not oversell your level of proficiency in a language (fluent means you could interview in the language). Though not required, it may be helpful to qualify your language skills.

Skills: SPSS, STATA, R, Microsoft Office Suite

Languages: English (Fluent), French (Fluent), Spanish (Proficient)

RELEVANT RESEARCH & PUBLICATIONS

Include research and publications in your resume if: the employer references it in the job description; your research experience relates directly to the employer's field of practice; and/or it highlights technical skills and expertise that matches the employer's stated position requirements.

- If you have conducted or contributed to relevant research as a function of a job or internship, describe your research activities and accomplishments along with the other details of the job or internship in the "Relevant Experience" section of your resume.
- If you have conducted or contributed to relevant research as a function of your coursework, list the titles of the most relevant projects in the education section of your resume. As depicted in the example on page 5, each study/project title should be documented under the academic institution where you conducted the research.
- If you have conducted or contributed to one or more high level post-graduate studies (preferably published research), create a "Relevant Research" section in your resume. In this section, list each study in alphabetical order by the author's last name, using APA or MLA style format to document all of the relevant information about the study. See the example below (APA format):

RELEVANT RESEARCH

Author, A. A., Author, B. B., & Author, C.C. (Year). Title of Article. Title of Periodical, volume number (issue number), pages.

Harlow, H. F. (2003). Evaluating Capacity Building Strategies and Techniques. Journal of Management Science, 55, 893-896.

» NOTE: Be sure that the research you include in this section is highly relevant and indicative of advanced research skills.

ADDITIONAL ELEMENTS TO INCLUDE

Use the following categories to list any remaining, relevant information that does not fit easily into the aforementioned sections:

- Professional Association Memberships;
- Relevant Certification or Licensure (list letters designating your credentials after your name at the top of the page);
- Recent Security Clearances (typical for government jobs);
- Civil Service Exams;
- Non-Degree Trainings (only if the training is an industry standard such as HIPPA training in the medical field);
- Additional experience (things you want to include that aren't directly related, but cover time periods).

WHAT DOES NOT BELONG IN A RESUME

- An Objective Statement—Put this information in your cover letter;
- GPA—At the graduate level, your GPA is only relevant when an employer asks for evidence of your academic record;
- References Available Upon Request—This much is assumed;
- Unrelated Undergraduate and Extracurricular Activities;
- Personal Information, such as interests, marital status, or birthdate;
- Your headshot or any photos of you.

LANGUAGE

The words and phrases used in standard resume writing can differ from other written materials. Be sure to:

- Use concise bulleted points to describe each of your professional experiences;
- Begin each statement with an action verb;
- Avoid passive language, such as: worked as, responsible for, assisted with;
- Avoid pronouns (I, my, she, they, their, our) or articles (the, a);
- Emphasize that you understand the employer's priorities by incorporating language from the job description into your bullet points;
- Only use acronyms or jargon that are industry norms;
- Use the present tense for all things related to your current position(s) and the past tense for things done in previous positions.

FORMAT

A single error in a resume may cause the employer to assume that you are careless in your work. Proofread your resume. Proofread it again. Have at least two other people proofread your resume. Then, proofread your resume at least one more time.

PAGE LENGTH

Generally, your entire resume should fit on one page unless you have more than seven to ten years of relevant experience. Here, 'relevant experience' refers to jobs, internships, volunteer opportunities, and research that relate directly to the employer's field of practice and the position requirements.

- » NOTE: US federal resumes, academic CVs, and resumes for non-US employers are the exception to the one page rule. Refer to the resources on page 1 of this guide and schedule an advising appointment with a Career Services advisor to discuss these formats in detail.

BULLETS

Employers prefer to read resumes that use bullets to describe relevant experience, and they often discard resumes loaded with narrative text. Bullets:

- Help the reader find specific information quickly;
- Help you highlight responsibilities, skill sets, and accomplishments that warrant additional focus;
- Allow you to quickly arrange and rearrange your resume entries to show relevance to a specific employer or sector.

FONT & MARGINS

Use consistent and clear fonts. Resist the urge to be fancy. “Times New Roman” or “Arial” are safe bets.

- Avoid the overuse of italics and bolded text—they can be difficult to read;
- Use a font size of 10-12 (do not use a size smaller than 10);
- Maintain a sufficient amount of white space on the page so that your resume is easy to read;
- Remember, what matters most is the quality—not the quantity—of what you write in a resume;
- Use consistent margins; they should never be smaller than 0.5 inches.

When emailing your resume it is best to send it in PDF format so that the formatting does not change when the employer opens it. However, always follow the employer’s instructions if they are requesting a specific format.
