

NYU WAGNER IN THE MEDIA: APRIL, 2012

"THE GREATEST CHANGE IN COMMUTING IS IT'S NO LONGER DOWN TIME." - MITCHELL MOSS (04/05/12).

Date	Media	Headline	Wagner Source	Discipline	Interview/Excerpt
April 2, 2012		New York is Lucky Not to Have the Games [Op-ed]	Mitchell Moss	Urban Planning	"Let the games begin: New York's high-energy sidewalk fashion show, and spontaneous flow of people all day and night, would win the gold medal for urban life - with or without the Olympics."
April 5, 2012		The Super-Commuter Commitment	Mitchell Moss	Urban Planning	"The great change in commuting is it's no longer down time. We have WiFi on trains and buses, we have, in a car, more information than ever before, not just radio -- we have people getting and making phone calls."
April 7, 2012		The Rise of the Super Commuter	January 0, 1900	Urban Planning	In an analysis published in February titled "The Emergence of the Super-Commuter," Mr. [Mitchell] Moss and his colleagues at NYU's Rudin Center for Transportation concluded that there are about 1.15 million individuals doing such extreme commuting in 10 large U.S. metro regions.
April 10, 2012		New York Ranked Leading Global City	Mitchell Moss	Urban Planning	"New York serves more direct international destinations than any other city in North America," Moss said. "We offer boundless opportunities for face-to-face contact and direct interpersonal meetings, something that is rare in this age of online meetings and email."
April 11, 2012		Workers Making Longer and Longer Commutes	Mitchell Moss	Urban Planning	Regardless, said Mitchell Moss, an NYU professor and author of the study, the trend speaks to both the increased flexibility of modern-day workers — "the office" can be almost anywhere — and the challenges that two-income families face in a weak job market: Why uproot your family when your spouse can't get a job in the new city?
April 11, 2012		North Korea Yearning for the Spotlight and Isolation [Op-ed]	Dorothy Stuehmke [alumna]	International Development	"Perhaps what the international community may want to consider is North Korea's third goal: isolation ... [which] buys the North Korean government time to strategize, while prolonging the suffering of its vulnerable citizens."
April 11, 2012		Lawyers Part of Super-Commuter Trend	Rudin Center	Urban Planning	According to a report from the Rudin Center for Transportation and Policy Management at New York University's Wagner School of Public Service, super-commuters have become more common in recent years.
April 12, 2012		Jim Kim's Humility Would Serve World Bank Well [Op-ed]	John Gershman	International Development	"President Obama's nomination of Jim Yong Kim to be president of the World Bank is a powerful choice for an institution charged with addressing some of the world's toughest challenges."
April 12, 2012		The Long Road Home	Mitchell Moss	Urban Planning	"No one wants to uproot their family. And with so many households, more than half of the households in America having two earners, it's very hard for both people to get a job in the same city. As a result we are finding out that people are traveling great distances."
April 13, 2012		"Going Solo"	Eric Klinenberg	Public Policy	"This is the biggest social change in the last 50-60 years that we failed to name or identify. Think of it this way: In 1950 there were 4 million Americans living alone, or 9 percent of all households. Today, 33 million, or 28 percent of American households, are living alone."
April 16, 2012		Take the early bus: meet NY's super-commuters	Mitchell Moss	Urban Planning	"This is a trend that's only going to intensify, because Americans are much more able to become mobile in terms of their jobs than they can be in terms of housing."
April 17, 2012		Trains Increase the Number of Quiet Cars	Eric Klinenberg	Urban Planning	Carving out some peace and quiet "is one of the most challenging struggles of our time. Unfortunately, the need to always work usually trumps our need for solitude."

April 17, 2012		Are You One of Calgary's Super-Commuters?	Mitchell Moss	Urban Planning	"We have seen, for the first time, growth in this pattern across all of the United States."
April 23, 2012		Cuomo Names Ex.-Gov Paterson to MTA Board	Mitchell Moss	Transportation	"This is an inspired appointment by Gov. Cuomo since it provides a way to draw upon David Paterson's knowledge and deep concern for the future of New York."
April 23, 2012		Walmart May Lose Traction in NYC After Mexico Bribery Scandal	Mitchell Moss	Urban Planning	"New York is not Mexico. We have laws, rules, and a local government that is not under the control of drug dealers and violent gangs."
April 25, 2012		Voto de latinos, mulheres e negros derrotará republicanos'	Rogan Kersh	Presidential Campaign	"Quando a administração Obama decidiu processar o Arizona alegando a inconstitucionalidade da lei, a eleição pode ter sido decidida. Foi um movimento muito popular entre os latinos", afirma Kersh.
April 26, 2012		Federal Leaders Get Lower Marks Than Private-Sector Peers, New Study Shows	Paul Light	Federal Governance	"Title creep continues unabated."
April 26, 2012		Mobile App Lets Parents Know Instantly About Absences	Kinvolved [Student Team]	Digital Technology	The app also dramatically reduces the time it takes for teachers to take attendance.
April 26, 2012		Interview with Irshad Manji	Irshad Manji	Social Justice	"Over the last 50-75 years, more Muslims have been tortured and murdered by fellow Muslims than by any foreign power. Moderate Muslims deny this fact, they stay silent about this fact."
April 26, 2012		Graduate Student Works to Spread L.O.V.E., Empower Latina Youth	Claudia Espinosa	Mentoring	"I decided to create a program on my own that would help the Latina community."
April 27, 2012		Perp Walks and the Broken Bureaucracy [Op-ed]	Paul Light	Federal Governance	"The General Services Administration and the U.S. Secret Service have proven once again that the federal government's 'catch-me-if-you-can' approach to accountability and ethics does not work."
April 30, 2012		The State of NYC's Housing and Neighborhoods	Vicki Been	Housing	"Of course, a lot of our low and moderate income neighborhoods have seen a great deal of foreclosures, so there are opportunities available in the stock, but also a lot of those neighborhoods are on the way up -- they are changing so they provide opportunities."
